What happens when that thug shit seems to outweigh that love shit? How will each character rise to the occasion, when shit goes way left? Just when you thought things were going to be normal, in the wake of Mero's and Bryce's deaths, the lives of Teedra and crew take a shocking turn. Left for dead in their driveway, it was an uncertainty of whodunit and why. What happens when the clock's ticking and time may or may not be on Teedra and Aldris's side? Will they survive? What will happen to Teedra's baby? Todd seems to be happy, but things are not as they seem. As his fiancée, Natalie gets closer to her due date, Todd begins an uphill battle of his morals versus his hormones. He does the unthinkable and love may not even be enough to help him get out of this situation. Will he be able to fix things or will it all blow up in his face? Marlon finally thinks that he's found the one in the kind, caring, and free-spirited, Melina and all he wants is peace. Just when he thinks that he has conquered peace of mind, a chain of events prove that, that may just prove to be impossible. All he wants to do is live life with his girlfriend and kids. With baby mama drama and a possible enemy lurking in the shadows, that peace may be even harder to obtain. Will Marlon be able to expose this enemy that is targeting the crew or will he die trying? The stakes are higher than ever now. With no leads and dead ends on who the enemy or enemies are, life just got more difficult for the crew and their quest for getting to that love shit.
