Deep Water Jane Jennings

Too soon for love? The Widow Fowler doesn't think so when a certain letter drops out of the past into her mail chute. Mary Frances Vansant's early years were spent on a farm in the Thirties, a time of drought, storms, and bottomless depression; before rural electrification, running water, farm subsidies, paved roads, or credit cards. The incredible hardships of farm life were softened by the beauty of nature, an abundance of home-grown food, and the warmth of a close-knit, loving family, as well as her dreams of love in the arms of a handsome schoolmate. As an adult, she marries, drops the "Mary" from her name, and becomes Mrs. Frances Fowler, and later the Widow Fowler. A second chance at love is offensive to a straight-laced sister, and to the small-town mores. Is it too soon, or too late?
